ABOUT PIUTE COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICT

Piute County School District is nestled in the heart of southern Utah between three of Utah's five national parks. A rich pioneer heritage is still strong in Piute County which serves as the borders of the school district. The county that once stretched all the way to Colorado now just includes the best 758 square miles. Historically the counties population fluctuated greatly with the successes and failures of the counties mines. The current estimated population of the county is 1,534 with the majority of residents working in agriculture.

The school district serves preschool through high school age students. Preschool and elementary age students attend either Oscarson Elementary in Marysville or Circleville Elementary in Circleville. Middle and high school aged students attend Piute High School in Junction. Online students from across the state attend the district online school, Utah Peak Academy. October 1, 2025 enrollment included 23 K-6 students at Oscarson Elementary, 94 K-6 students at Circleville Elementary, 136 7-12 students at Piute High School, and 156 K-9 students online through Utah Peak Academy.

Piute County School District has seen academic and athletic successes well above it's size and location. Piute High School qualifies over a dozen students for Nationals FBLA nearly every year and has placed nationally multiple times, including national titles in some events. Piute High School students are frequently listed among the Utah Central Region's Sterling Scholars. From 2021-2025 Piute High School won more athletic state titles than during any other 5 year period in school history. Significant gains and successes have been achieved in other athletic and academic areas as well.
