Michael R. McGough
Associate Professor of Education,
York College of Pennsylvania

Keynote Speaker

Dr. McGough will take you on a virtual tour of the battlefield at Gettysburg and will examine “how the leadership strategies employed at Gettysburg are relevant and closely tied to the contemporary complex intricacies of interpersonal and organizational leadership.”

The author of many articles focusing on education, he has also published eight books, several of which focus on the Battle of Gettysburg and the lessons it can teach us today. “Few events in history provide a better setting for a study of organizational leadership than the Battle of Gettysburg. A study of this historic three-day engagement in July of 1863 produces abundant examples of strikingly simple and highly intricate leadership strategies. The stunning examples of successes and failures in the decision-making process serve as vivid illustrations of the consequences of effective and ineffective leadership initiatives.”

He holds a BA in Education and secondary social studies from the University of Pittsburgh, an MLA in liberal arts, a doctorate in Adult Education and Education Staff Development from Pennsylvania State University. Dr. McGough has experience as a teacher, coach, assistant principal, principal, assistant superintendent and senior program advisor.

Dr. McGough has been an Associate Professor of Education at York College of Pennsylvania from 2001 until the present.

This session focuses on the ubiquitous role of mobile learning to drive, accelerate and transform a student's everyday experiences resulting in improved outcomes. We will examine best practices in mobile learning using research studies from across the nation, as well as a discussion of key factors that directly affect the success of one-to-one implementation.

CELEBRATING DIVERSITY UTAH STYLE

Flagstaff Room

Presented by Pam Perlich and McKell Withers
Facilitator: Kim Burningham, USBA Board of Directors

We are witnesses to and participants in a great demographic, economic, and cultural transformation. The dynamics driving this change originate from our increasing interconnectedness with the rest of the world, principally through markets, technology, and migrations of people. However, the confluence and interplay of all these dynamics coincides with increasing economic inequality. Patterns of this emerging complexity and diversity vary dramatically by neighborhood and community. Statewide or even city-level averages do not capture the wide range of socioeconomic conditions or demographic characteristics. Because people experience their lives in neighborhoods, an understanding of current and changing conditions that impact individual life opportunities and outcomes requires high-quality data at ever smaller geographies. Similarly, appropriate and effective policies, practices, and investments in education, housing, public health, transportation, and other areas require a sound foundation of data at the neighborhood level.

LEGISLATIVE ADVOCACY 101 BASIC ELEMENTS

Wyoming Room

Presented by Kristi Swett, USBA 2nd Vice President and Representative Merrill Nelson

School board members have one mission: Provide the best education possible for all children. As “Ambassadors for Education,” it is imperative that board members have the tools and resources to communicate to stakeholders. USBA and special guests will provide legislative advocacy tools and techniques to assist board members as they advocate for public schools.
